Particularly energized about working with children, Mabel notes: "We need to start with the children because we cannot allow them to go through what we went through. If they are happy, they will create happy communities, happy schools, happy businesses and happy and peaceful worlds. If they love and accept themselves, they will be able to love and accept others. If they know they do not need to be perfect, but that they are unique and perfect the way they are, they will admire differences, appreciate diversity and respect others."

"It is very important to take of 100% responsibility and be happy parents first, in order to grow happy children."
